Join the UK's Leading Independent Poultry Veterinary Practice

At St David's Poultry Team, we're not looking for someone to simply fill a vacancy.

We're looking for someone who wants to build a rewarding career at the forefront of poultry health, welfare and production.

As demand for our services continues to grow across the UK, we are seeking ambitious Veterinary Surgeons to join our specialist poultry team. Opportunities are currently available across our teams in Newark, Leominster and Penrith.

Whether you are an experienced poultry veterinarian or a farm animal vet looking to specialise, you will join one of the most respected and progressive poultry practices in the country.

Why This Role Is Different

Our role is to help poultry businesses prevent disease, improve welfare and optimise performance, supporting customers who operate at the highest standards of modern poultry production.

Our vets work closely with producers, nutritionists and technical managers, helping customers solve complex flock health and production challenges across a wide range of poultry enterprises.

You'll work with some of the UK's leading egg, broiler, breeder and gamebird producers, providing strategic advice, disease investigation, flock health planning and technical support that has a direct impact on flock performance and business success.

Working alongside a highly experienced team of poultry specialists, you will have the opportunity to develop expertise across all aspects of poultry production medicine, contribute to innovation and trials, and play an important role in the continued growth of the practice.

As an independent practice, we are able to make decisions quickly, invest in new ideas and provide opportunities for progression, responsibility and leadership.

What You'll Be Doing

This is a varied and rewarding role that combines practical veterinary work, technical consultancy and long-term customer relationships.

You will be involved in:

- Disease investigations and diagnostic work.
- Routine on-farm veterinary visits, providing health and welfare planning, technical support and strategic advice.
- Supporting assurance schemes including Lion Code, Red Tractor and veterinary health and welfare reviews.
- Disease surveillance and outbreak investigations, including Avian Influenza preparedness and response.
- Data analysis, flock performance reviews and epidemiological investigations to help customers optimise health, welfare and productivity.
- Building strong working relationships with customers and supporting them with the day-to-day challenges of poultry production.
- Providing practical and innovative solutions to flock health and production challenges.
- Export certification and regulatory work where required.
- Contributing to trials, technical development and the continued growth of the practice.

Working alongside an experienced team of poultry specialists, you will have the opportunity to develop your knowledge across a diverse range of sectors, including layers, broilers, breeders, gamebirds and other specialist poultry enterprises.

The role offers a good balance of farm visits, diagnostics, consultancy and problem-solving.
